DEFENDER AN UNLUCKY SHIP?

The Sailorman Says She's Hoodooed and Proves It by Superstition.

NAVAL SCIENTIST DENIES IT.

Two Ways of Accounting for the Mishaps Which Began at Her Launching.

is Defender hoodcoed?

Sailormen are superstitious, and their superstitions often seem verified by the misfortunes of a "hard luck" craft which happens to bear the taint of their fancied bewitchment. The beginning of the career of a properly orthodox "hoodooed" vessel is to have her stick pushed night and day. in launching. This Defender has done, and the old shellbacks shake their heads sagely, and express the sentiment that nothing need be surprising about her future mishaps, from carrying away the hinges of the fo'cas'le hatch to complete collapse, including the loss of all hands and the cook. Defender, having been born unlucky,

Her mainsail was then holsted and she got out of her berth, July 7.—Two of Defender's hollow steel stancious were bent V-shipped by the strain to which they were subjected during heavy wind puffs. The aluminum bolts and plus about her masthend were niso twisted out of shape.

July 20.—Defender's wooden sprenders and braces showed weakness, some of the latter eracking and splitting.

July 30.—Defender's steering goar stuck when she was some printers abend of Vigilant, in the was some printers abend of Vigilant, in the was some printers abend of Vigilant, in the keeps. Tammy Remains a pission at first base was a playful as a two-year-ship year-ship year

This is the strong point in stick fast in her cracily against all same the stick fast in her cracile against all the hauling and tugging that was done, until she finally made up her mind to let go, and then slide right off? This is this argument, and no amount of talk about fulcrum, power and mechanical principles in general can turn him from [Fills 51 et 51 et 52 et strength applied to each part of the yacht's running gear, her blocks, plat-ing and timbers, telling you she cannot possibly carry away anything that would cause her to sacrifice the America Cup to the challenger without a contest to the end of each of the races. And again, some of the tested bolts pull-out and some of the stays that are registered at "20,000 pounds direct strain" part, giving the illogical, superstitious sailorman the better end of the argument.

Which is right, the superstition of the sallorman that Defender is hoodcoed because of her reluctance to properly enter the element for which she was designed, or the scientist, who says his calculations have amply provided for tests and contingencies greater than the yacht will be called upon to meet?
